

Contribute to the global understanding of ATS

Dear Doctor,

We are connecting with you because of your experience treating patients with arterial tortuosity syndrome (ATS). Since so little is known about this disease, a better understanding of ATS is essential among the medical community.

Cambridge BioMarketing, a global healthcare communications agency focusing on rare diseases, is currently in the process of creating an informational website for families facing ATS and the physicians who treat this rare disease. This website will provide information on ATS such as the causes and symptoms, describe the current clinical landscape, and serve as a place for scientists to gain inspiration for conducting ATS research.

In an effort to learn more about what it is like to have a patient with ATS, Cambridge BioMarketing is looking to interview physicians who have experience with this disease. The goal is to gain a better understanding of what it is like to diagnose and treat ATS patients.

If you are interested in helping further the world's understanding of ATS, we are eager to talk with you. You could share your experiences through a phone interview or via email.

If you would like to participate in helping us create this informational ATS website and you consent to an interview, please contact Lin Betancourt or Julia Bond at your convenience using the information below.
